

DC-3 World Rally 2005 flight WR 05-01.

My thanks go to Cliff Cannon for providing me with the basic flight plan for this flight in South Africa.

The flight is a little long at around two and three quarter hours but you won't have much spare time as the flight, though fairly straightforward, is quite demanding in its navigational requirements.

The flight begins in a South African dawn and takes us via three touch and go landings, each with a different style of approach, to a final nice easy approach and landing at what is possibly the world's largest river port, East London.

There is a large number of .pdf files included which between them I hope will contain all the information you will require for a successful flight.

Enjoy the flight.

Don't forget to check fuel levels and payload before departure.
